A child in a bicycle helmet rides through a crowd in Jakarta, Indonesia. (Photo by Chaimaa Ezzati/NurPhoto via Getty Images) Everytime a child is arrested or a citizen is detained or a man is beaten up on the street, the media gets out its camera and point it to this. Every time something happens in our country, the whole world gets to see it. If I have to be honest, for a long time, this didn't bother me. Until today. While I was in bed after the long interview, I got an alert on my phone saying that I got a text from an ex-colleague. I opened it and noticed that it was a very old text sent in January, some days before coronavirus appeared in Malaysia. The message was: "An old friend who used to be an ajak driver asked me if she can tell you about coronavirus." I didn't know about her because the last time we talked was in April 2014. And when I checked the Malaysian government's website, I realized I hadn't heard anything about coronavirus before. How much time has passed, I still don't know. But I'm getting old. The chart above shows all of the individual stories from the Mega Millions lottery that were won between January 1, 2011 and October 12, 2011. On that day, the jackpot was won by two couples in Ohio and Tennessee. Two more tickets were sold in Ohio; one in California, and one in Tennessee. If you combine these three tickets, you get a grand total of $814 million! You could have won that much, too, if you had bought one of those tickets. The math is really simple here; one third of $814 million is $273 million, which is the amount of money you could have won if you were lucky enough to win one of those tickets. If you are thinking that the odds of winning this jackpot are incredibly low, you are right. The last time a ticket sold at this office in California was won, it was January 19, 2011. So, the odds of being the jackpot winner are 1 in 300,000. Most lottery winners are not millionaires. Most lottery winners are people who have to come up with the money for the ticket. I can only imagine the shock when they come back from the lottery office to find out that they won. Once you realize the value of what you just won, you might be tempted to spend all of that money right away. Don't. You will need that money to pay off taxes. Next time you go to the lottery, know the odds. You have a much better chance of winning $1 million. You have a much better chance of getting tickets sold at your local lottery office. If you are lucky enough to win the lottery, you don't have to do anything with your prize money. All that you need to do is put money into a savings account and you will be able to grow that money to a huge amount of money. I hope this guide is helpful to you. -Mr. Simple With increasing use of digital imaging technology, digital cameras are becoming a common tool for personal and business use. Most 1d6a3396d6
