El Gato Negro is a traditional 1 vs 1 fighting game with RPG elements in the style of SoulCalibur. It features 6 playable characters. Each character has a selection of unique attacks. Inflict a different type of damage depending on the weapon or type of weapon. Your weapon is a ranged weapon or a melee weapon. The stronger the better! Ranged weapons have a range of 2 meters. Melee weapons have a range of 1 meter. Each time you hit a Nightmare, you will gain points. Sets of six levels will appear on the screen. Players can challenge one of their opponent's set by pressing the A button. As set scores increase, the level of difficulty will also increase. Players will win once they break all six levels. Individual battle levels are accessible. Characters can be switched on the fly. Players will be able to complete new quests in addition to the main quests. Each quest also corresponds to a particular soul. Players will have to collect these "Soul Gems" for that particular Quest, when they defeat the corresponding Nightmare. Players can use the nine weapons listed below during the battle. A Sword, A Short Sword, A Staff, A Whip, A Long Whip, A Martial Spear, A Long Staff, A Rivet Gun and a Cannon. So there are 9 weapons, 6 main characters and 9 stages. This is one of three DLCs available for this game. The other two are 'Light Weapons' and 'Gensokyo'. ## What's new:

December 13, 2006 A young widow became pregnant after being raped. Life seemed to be going well until she discovered that the rapist was her husband's close friend and when she approached him he laughed heartily and said that it wasn't rape at all - it was a deliberate act of lovemaking. This poor woman went home and found that her husband had been killed, leaving her a widow with no intention to marry again and no resources to support herself and her child. Years had passed and her little daughter was now an adult. All was not lost, however, since this young widow had the friend of her husband's murderer just where she wanted him. These two lovers invited her in and sat down. Knowing what was going to happen the widow ran from home while her daughter was just a few steps away. Once the girl was inside they went to bed and consummated a union while the girl remained in her room. When it was all over, it seemed to her as if she had done something wrong, because her husband was still alive and they had not died together. She protested to her saviours that their union should have been proper, but they said she was only a little girl, and together they ordered her to sleep with them. The next day the young girl told her mother that she could now talk to her other father. The adults were all too bewildered and could give her no real answer. Only the two men seemed to know what had happened. When they came to the girl's mother and told her that she was already married to someone else, she approached the girl and said that her mystery husband was a wizard who had divine power to be able to save her. The girl knew nothing about magic, but she is certain that the man who had just raped her was a wizard. The girl was sorrowful, because she loved him. She told her mother to take her back to him and asked if she was allowed to know his true name. Her mother agreed and took the child to a certain wizard, who of course got better things to do with his time than to help her. However, he did not make things easy for her. He immediately said that she was already married and should be taken to the man that she really wanted. She replied that she loved him very much and that if he loved her as much she would go with him. Then he said, "Let him tell you
