Twilight Princess: A New Legend of ZeldaPosted by z-post on September 3, 2011 at 10:54:37 AM CDTQ: Asking "Blah blah blah..." to be given attention I was watching a TED talk/video this morning about setting up a workshop for the next generation of scientists. One of the points was asking students to ask the instructor for time to air out their thoughts/ideas and ask or answer questions. The speaker said one of the good ways to be given a lot of attention is to say the following: ...blah blah blah... At about the two-minute mark I start to think well, no-one gives their thoughts in the TED talks without asking first. How has this phrase fallen out of common use? What would an example be that doesn't have a reason to say so (because it is not something ever said, or someone just replies with "sure, blah blah blah")? A: Saying "Blah blah blah" is not something people often say, but there are lots of terms that don't have perfect analogs in common English, and some of those "colloquialisms" really do follow a fairly regular pattern. Specifically, "Blah blah blah" is a fairly universal way of getting someone's attention for a reason that isn't obvious. You have to be careful about using that one, because it can be seen as rude. John Hagee is being vilified today for his clarion call for action in support of Israel. This is hardly a surprise, for Hagee has been one of Israel's most ardent supporters. A longtime leader of the Three Generational Agency International, an independent Christian Zionist organization dedicated to fulfilling prophecy, he became a favorite guest of Israeli leader Benjamin Netanyahu and is now related by marriage to Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin. In this exclusive WorldNetDaily exclusive, The Hagee Club interviews five prominent Jewish scholars about Pastor Hagee and his spot in Jewish religious history.  He's a Baptist theologian, a famous preacher and religious historian, and a symbol of hope for many Jews. His name is John Hagee. He's been called 'Israel's Hagee,' and 'Israel's Colin Powell.' Pastor Hagee has become a symbol of hope for many Jews worldwide, despite his leadership in the infamous 'Church Of Persecution.' On May 10, 1981, at the height of the Temple Mount crisis over the desecration of the area, the New York Times reported that approximately 1000 Israelis and Arabs stood in the shadow of the Jaffa Gate and sang 'Amazing Grace' as a symbolic salute to the Israelis who had been killed in the riots. The Spirit of Jerusalem, a yearly celebration of Israel's biggest Jewish holiday, that climaxes in Jerusalem's rededication of the Western Wall, was organized by Pastor Hagee. Pastor Hagee was in Jerusalem on May 11, 1985, to give what the New York Times dubbed a
