Whether you are an advanced user who simply wants to make some changes, or if you are a beginner who wants to experience the power of desktop customization, this tutorial will walk you through the entire process of customizing your Windows XP environment. It is important to mention that the tricks presented in this article will not crash your computer if you choose not to follow them. You will have full access to your Windows XP to customize as much as you want. Windows XP Media Center 2010 home edition is an operating system for home use. It is compatible with some Windows XP Media Center 2006 versions. We have to download a copy of Windows XP from the official Microsoft Web site, extract it from the.iso file, and burn it to a CD or to a DVD to make it into a bootable CD. After doing that, we can boot it, then insert the CD, and the Windows XP will be loading. After that, we'll install it. It's that simple. The first step is to open up the Add/Remove Programs tool, type "ActiveX" in the search box, and click the Add/Remove Programs button on the right. The Primary PC running Windows XP and the Secondary PC running Windows XP will show up in the list, and clicking on either should allow you to browse the Windows Add/Remove programs on the Secondary PC. If Windows is installed, but you're not sure if it's currently installed, select "Windows XP: Home" from the list on the left and then click the Next button. Windows XP should then look similar to the image below. Windows XP's Add/Remove Programs tool, while in most situations easily navigable, is not always easy to use. Before you can do anything more, you have to get rid of a couple of entries that don't seem to exist on your Secondary PC. The first is the text: "PC Tools". Expand the button below this, then delete the Check for Updates option. Click OK when finished. The second is: "Microsoft Office 2002". Expand the button below this, then delete the Microsoft Office 2002 Options tool. Click OK when finished. Click the Apply button to complete the steps to remove the two entries from the Add/Remove Programs tool.
